Professor Lennox is the former Director of QCIDD and has 25 years' experience offering health care to adults with intellectual disability, their families and supporters. He has been part of developing many innovations to improve and assist advocacy to improve the physical and mental health, and healthcare of adults with intellectual disability. He is interested in strategies which make real difference on-the-ground and will draw on his understand and experience, which has been often drawn from the insights of adults with intellectual disability, their families and supporters, and their health care providers.

The evidence indicates that people with intellectual disabilities have lower life expectancy and greater frequency of unmet health needs than the general population. This workshop is targeted to Support Workers and families who are interested promoting better health and healthcare of people with intellectual disability.
