The Disability Royal Commission: One Year On

This event is about the Disability Royal Commission which looked at the abuse of people with intellectual disabilities.

You will hear from leading academics, peak bodies, people with intellectual disabilities and service providers about what the Royal Commission found. They will talk about how this is the same or different from research. They will also talk about what has happened in the past year and what needs to happen next. The topics are supported decision-making, inclusive governance, mainstream housing, parenting, and living in a rural area.

There will be time to talk about what needs to change. A graphic facilitator will create a picture of what the people presenting and attending the event talk about.

The event is hybrid. You can attend in person or online.
